Battering Down the Serate Doors. Senators who cling fondly to the secret session are not particularly desirous of going on the record with their votes against that popular proposition. They resort to the little parliamentary tricks to dodge the vote; they do not speak against neasure; there is absolutely no recorded thing to show that they are doing their level best to perpetuate the system of assassinating character in star chamber.

This is one of the hopeful signs. When men in public life are cornered so that they do not wish to be caught red-handed in opposition to a measure, that measure is on the road to triumph. In his strong and ringing speech the other day Senator Logan declared that already the battle is practically won. "The doors will be pened," he said, "mark what I tell you, and it will not be long, either."

Logan twitted the Senators on the tender subject of Senatorial leakage-rossied the weak brethren in full view of all the world. He knew that secrets of the star chamber did get out, and he knew that they were not given out by the officers of the Fenate. Since Senators were bound to secrecy, he concluded that the solemn conclave must be betrayed by the furniture of the chamber.

Logan is a Senator of long experience. When he declares that there is not a single reason for sitting with closed doors, and gives of his own knowledge conclusive reasons for opening the doors, popular judgment, which cries "Away with the secret session!" cannot be altogether at fault, a "mining Lelephone.

agencies that may choose to take it up.

The work of Francis Murphy, now worthly supplemented by that of his son, has been long enough before the world to be judged on its merits. By this time it ought to be possible to form a fair estimate of the man,—whether he is sincere; whether he is trying to serve his kind by winning men from strong drink; whether he is the set does not so out in love to the his heart does not go out in love to the wretched drunkard in the gutter; or

The national credit is No More selonal temperance evangelist," and the allegation that the profession is frequently a lucrative one, show once more that it is much easier to form a new party and to advocate its cause, than to practice fairness and justice and to form judgments of men based on their lives and their work. Nobody supposes that Francis Murphy lives like the orchid. It is known that he did not begin his work with a fortune to live on. He receives money, or he would have to find some other way to keep his family in bread. To insinuate that he is a mere spollsman in the temperance work is to emphasize once more the well-under stood fuct that in the eyes of Third Party leaders, there is no good citizenship, no say rectitude of purpose or action, unless enisted under the Third Party banner. Francis Murphy may be a "professiona temperence evangelist," but he is not a professional impugner of motives and maligner of character. He is even able to understand that a man who does not agree with him is not necessarily a scoundrel in 1 00 league with other scoundrels to destroy 65 the moral props of society.

messenger delivery, and to use messengers where they can be used. The various devices to overcome this difficulty are not satisfactory.

Another objection, arising less frequently but infinitely greater, is that there is no record of a telephone message. For this reason, also, telegrams are sent where they can be sent, and where they can be sent business is transacted at great risk by telephone, or at loss of time by those who prefer to forego the convenience of the telephone rather than incur the bazard of misunderstanding, abused confidence and litigation.

A device for "telephone writing," so-called, has been invented and tested in New York and Pittsburgh, it is said the satisfactory.

Mr. Beecher has been visiting his early cities of the country, perhaps through the telephone companies, perhaps as a separate service.

Wonderful a device as the telephone is, we shall see great improvements in it, and perhaps something that will divide the field with it, as the "writing telephone" if practical will do.

The Voice, which we take to be the Prohibition party organ of chief circulation and influence, makes the following editorial comment:

Mr. Francis Murphy has a son. He follows the same profession as his father; that is, he is a professional temperance evangelist. The profession is frequently a lucrative one, and none the less honorable for being lucrative. We hope Mr. T. E. Murphy will have as much success in the profession he has chosen as his father has had. We regret, therefore, that he is taking pains to curtail his usefulness, by abusing the confidence that has been reposed in him, partly on his father's, to assassinate the reputations of true-minded Christian workers in the same field

Really there is no reason why he should feel so bitter towards the new party. There is no probability that the success of national Prohibition will render the Gospel temperance evangelist altogether superflous. There will be something for him to do even then.

This because the Murphys, father and son, go on with their work in the temperance of the state o

An Eccay That Ought to Have Been Frame

The following story comes from a school in the midlands: "The master told the boys of the third class to write a short essay on Columbus. The following was sent up by an ambitious easayist: "Clumbus was a man who could make an egg stand on end without breaking it. The King of Spain said to Clumbus: 'Can you discover America?' 'Yes,' said Clumbus, 'If you will give me a ship.' So he had a ship and sailed over the sea in the direction where he thought America ought to be found. The sailors quarreted and said they helieved there was no such place. But after many days the pilot came to him and said: 'Clumbus, I see land.' 'Then that is America,' said Clumbus. When the ship got near the land was full of black men. Clumbus said: 'Is this America?' 'Yes, it is,' said they, Then he said: 'I suppose you are Clumbus.' 'You are right,' said he. Then the Chief turned to his men and said: 'There is no help for it,' we are discovered at last.''

"Have been traveling down South," said a garrulous passenger who sat next the aigle in a crowded car, and coolly looked two or three standing women in the eye, "and the people down there have some peculiar traits. For instance, every man claims to to be a gentleman. No matter what his breeding, his condition in life, his manners or his state of sobriety, he claims to be a gentleman, sah." "Oh, well," said the lady who occupied one-half of his seat, "it seems to be about the same in the North." "And another thing I noticed," continued the garrulous passenger, "that in the South the gentlemen always get up in horse or steam cars and give their seats to ladies, who might otherwise he compelled to stand." "That is not extraordinary, either," replied the garrulous passenger's soft-voiced seatmate, with a significant glance at the women standing in the aisle; "gentlemen do the same thing here in the North."
